BOOKS OF NOTE

The Mathematical Theory of Investment

By Ernest Brown Skinner, University of Wisconsin

245 pages, $2.25

The sections on depreciation contain material hitherto unpublished and will prove of special interest to those engaged in the solution of the important problems of adjusting the rates for public utilities. As a mathematical handbook for economists and statisticians, as well as for the up-to-date educated business man, the volume occupies a unique place.

An American History

By Nathaniel Wright Stephenson, College of Charlsston

515 pages, $1.50

In this new American history the ideals of each section of the country are viewed from within and the policies of each are shown in the light they wore to the men who originated them. The book is a genuine contribution to the literature of American history as well as a helpfully organized and teachable textbook, of value especially to students of present-day conditions and tendencies.

History of Past Ethics

P. V. N. Myers 387 pages, $1.50

A detailed study of the moral life in all the various stages of historic evolution from that of ancient Egypt to the new social and international conscience of the present age. The book presents a fresh and illuminating viewpoint of large historical movements, contemporary as well as past.

British Social Politics

By Carlton Hayes, Columbia University 580 pages, $1 75

Discussions of old age pensions, the Lloyd George Budget, the defeat of the House of Lords, and other measures in the present Liberal Party's program. Extracts from the Parliamentary speeches on each act make up the bulk of the volume. The text of the act and historical sketches by the editor are added.

Introduction to the History of Religions

By Crawford Howell Toy, Harvard University

xix + 639 pages, $3.00

In this work the development of religion is conceived as the product of all sides of human thought and activity—economic, political, philosophic, scientific, aesthetic, and ethical. The part that the religious sentiment has played in the organization and development of human societies, though not formally discussed, is constantly kept in view.

The Development of Modern Europe

By JAMES HARVEY ROBINSON and CHARLES A. BEARD of Columbia University.

Volume I. The Eighteenth Century; The French Revolution and the Napoleonic Period. 362 pages, $1.50.

Volume II. Europe since the Congress of Vienna. 448 pages, $1.60.

One of the best known and most satisfactory treatments of modern European history available for college use. It traces the development and growth of the States of modern Europe in a narrative in which accuracy, interest, and a just and discriminating sense of historical values are notable features. Fundamental economic and social matters—the Industrial Revolution, commerce and colonization, social and political internal reforms—receive the emphasis which is their due, while purely military events are given less space than has commonly been assigned them in textbooks in history. A course in Robinson and Beard's "Development of Modern Europe" will prepare the student for a real and active appreciation of the results, immediate and eventual—whatever these may be—of the present conflict in Europe.

Readings in Modern European History

By JAMES HARVEY ROBINSON and CHARLES A. BEARD of Columbia University.

Volume I. 410 pages, $1.40.
Volume II. 541 pages, $1.50.

A collection of extracts from sources to accompany "The Development of Modern Europe," to which it corresponds in organization, chapter for chapter and section for section. The selections are chosen with the purpose of illustrating the important social, political, and economic phases of European history for the last two hundred years. The utterances of Bismarck, Karl Marx, Garibaldi, Gladstone, Chamberlain, Voltaire, and Mill are representative of the contents, while quotations from state papers and speeches and from newspapers are abundant. "Readings in Modern European History" furnishes a detailed and colorful picture of European history as it appeared to those who were looking on at its making.
